

I understand the concern that the movie industry has about films being swaped over the internet.

However, preventing consumers from making their own copies of television shows is something that the government should not get involved in. This is something that has been done for 25 years and the broadcast industry has prospered from it. The movie industry claims that high definition cointent is more dangerous to them. I do not believe this is correct and in any case the government should not get involved.

I oppose requiring a "Broadcast Flag".

Richard Roome